

ARE YOU READY FOR SOME FOOTBALL

By Erin Wold

There's something that happens as soon as the calendar hits September. The days get shorter, the temperature cools (especially here in North Carolina), the leaves start to change and, miraculously, the weekend "to do" and "honey do" lists start getting completed on Saturday or early on Sunday morning. I can't say for sure what starts these phenomena, however I think it's directly related to the beginning of football season. After all, who wants to be the only one on the block to miss kickoff due to yard work? So, I ask you Fort Bragg...

Are you ready for some football?

Anticipation of another season is finally put aside. Training camp has finally ended and preseason games are in the books. It's last call for getting your fantasy football team (or teams for some) set for another season of friendly competition. Fingers are crossed that someone doesn't snatch your top choices in the draft before you get a chance. Strategy is key and checking the injury reports weekly to make sure you make your line-up changes in time is essential. Businesses and offices across the country are filled with conversations about the Sunday games and predictions for the Monday game ahead. The jerseys and hats disappointedly put away at the end of last season come out again. And after a quick run through the laundry (if necessary), are donned for another season. Anything can happen and this WILL be the year for your team, no matter what team you call yours. Underdogs and perennial champions all start fresh. The tailgating grills come out for the endless supply of burgers, brats and hot dogs that find their way into the Sunday diets of many Americans. Staples like chips and salsa can't be left out either and of course the beverages of all kinds and kid-friendliness. It's a day of food, friends and, of course, endless choices of what game to watch.

Here on Fort Bragg, if you can't watch YOUR games at home it's not a problem. From kickoff to the final touchdown (or field goal), we've got it covered. Sundays at Sports USA you can watch any game on one of the 12 big screens. So whether you are cheering for the Panthers, Raiders, Cowboys or Dolphins (or anyone else) you can guarantee you will be able to watch your boys battle it out on the gridiron. Burgers to nachos, soda to beer we've got that too. All the game time goodies you'd have at home without the stress of making them yourself!
